

Learning from Ray is (initially at least) more than a full-time job! Because unless you are already familiar with all of the concepts he teaches, it will take much longer for you to assimilate than it does for Ray to teach it. Even for concepts with which the student is familiar, they invariably find that the institutional traders that Ray has taught have a different twist on them, or even take the completely opposite view to that which is taught to retail traders.

I'm not sure what you mean by sessions.

The trading/education room tends to be open 24x7. which gives access to recent 'Focus Session' recordings.

Ray gives commentary during the US morning Session, but he puts up charts and does some commentary/education whenever he is free from his duties for the Japanese Bank he currently works for. This is usually before 07:00 US Eastern Time, but could be as early as 04:35 US Eastern Time. The Bank's trades usually start/end on the main session starts/ends, so overnight trades initiated around the US Session close will probably be closed before/on any UK 04:30 news for example. Since Ray is employed as a 'Quant/Strategist', he passes instructions to the desk traders for them to carry out (which includes exits). The 'official' start of his US Session Commentary in the webinar room is 08:00 US Eastern Time.

His contract forbids him calling out trade entries and exits as they happen since these would be in conflict with the Bank taking its positions, however he is allowed to give entry and exit areas ahead of time -since these are always subject to any changes in Value/Sentiment/News.

He usually starts his Daily Focus Session at around 11:00 US Eastern Time, this consists of going over particular trades, techniques etc. These Focus sessions are all recorded. They usually last 90 minutes, but are sometimes longer. If there is an FOMC news event, he may well come back into the room for that.

He will then send out his Tweets from around 19:00 US Eastern to as late as 21:00 and will occasionally do some Tweets during the London and US sessions. To get his Tweets you need to separately subscribe to SmartAlpha.global (after taking one of his courses). He tries to make the Tweets about ideas for the London or US Session Opens, but sometimes things move faster than expected and so for some trades the trade is already over by London Open.

In the past the courses have usually consisted of 4 education sessions each of 3 to 5 hrs per week starting at 15:00 US Eastern Time (but not on a Wednesday since that is what he laughingly calls his half day - meaning he only works a total of a little over 12 hrs that day). All the course sessions are recorded

Quoting Ian K

Hi Ian, {quote} I really appreciate this last sentence from your previous post, so keeping the sentiment fresh in mind, please tell me in your honest opinion which are the absolutely essential videos from Ray's lessons which need to be studied in order to have a proper foundation? I know you'll be tempted to say, "all of them". Try to resist such an urge and narrow it down to the ten or so titles that from your time with the Compass group you think are completely indispensable. To help you in this endeavour I have catalogued every single video that...

Of course you know that what you ask is impossible!

There are at least as many 'absolutely essential videos from Ray in order to have a proper foundation' as there are students. Different students relate best to different styles of presentation and different technical and Fundamental resources.

It is not even humanly possible to remember the ones which most impressed me when going back over more than a 5 yr period and several thousand videos.

Here is my attempt, which consists of all of the latest basic foundation videos. Note that I have removed those which primarily feature one particular market. This is because although there are differences between markets, without knowing which market and in which trading style you prefer it is impossible to select appropriate market based videos:

There are some notable videos apart from the ones I selected. One of these was the 'Yellow Brick Road' video back in 2014 which just amazed us about how accurate it is possible to be in predicting future price action.

Another was in spring last year - outside of the normal hours and recorded only by a couple of students (i.e. no 'official' recording). That one was of Ray just marking where he would trade in real time. The most popular unofficial name of the recording was 'Silent Trading' since Ray gave no audio commentary and almost no typed commentary for the simple reason that there was not enough time to do so since he was in 'scalping mode'.

I have a copy of a the 'Silent Trading' on my PC. I will have to consider whether Ray would approve of it being freely available. If I decide it is OK to share, I will upload it to my Mega.co.nz account and post a link to it. However please understand that unless you understand Ray's initial Intern exercise phase 1 (trading MOMOs) it is 2 hrs of boredom.

To help you in this endeavour I have catalogued every single video that Ray has been a part of since his beginning with Compass back in 2014. I look forward to the recommended titles in your next post and will consider it a 'Happy New Year' gift... you know, seeing as you didn't buy me anything for Christmas. 😊

I haven't posted about my personal trading for a while, I do so now - but don't expect regular updates!

I have just posted in another thread because somebody in there thought that a profit of 10% in a month was actually good!

It isn't because:

A). A month is too short a period

B). you don't know how much risk was taken

C). Depending upon the trading style and hour traded, 10% per week is possible.

Here is my Post:

*****

I'm a lousy trader - but much better than most!

The reasons I am better than most are because:

1. I have been taught by probably the best. Taught both Fundamentals and OrderFlow (though I don't use Orderflow much- its too fast for me).
2. I have found a style and some markets (Major currency pairs for News, Oil for Inventories, Oil at major levels) that works for me.
3. I use a money/trade management system that suits my personality (multiple units, plus scaling both in and out).

Here is a short record of all my completed trading days so far in October - just so you know that I was not hypeing or B*S*ing in my post above:

Some Key Times of Day for Oil (CL) Trades:

(The following is a portion of a larger update I'm working on for the 'Oil Trading' document that I produced for those Sharp Edge students who joined my free 'Self Help Group'. The original document has not been updated for years because it is primarily focused on just the EIA Crude Oil Inventory release. And of which I have posted some details for the 'Sammy Trade' in this thread.)

London Open, US CL Open, London Close, Daily (Energy Product) Futures Settlement

Of these I hardly see anything about the Daily Settlement - so I guess it is a less obvious one. I have found that there is often a (short-term ) reversal in CL price starting around 14:28 Eastern Time (= usually 19:28 UK Time).

I often see at least 2 prior 2 min candles going in one direction before the Settlement Candle (and often several others) reverse direction.

While this is hardly ever a large move, it is mostly quite predictable and the predictability can be enhanced by other factors such as Levels, Value and OrderFlow (such as the Voltic and the Pressure Line).

Some Key Times of Day for Oil Trades: London Open .....
 Attached Image (click to enlarge)

Attached Image (click to enlarge)

1st image is from Ray's Tweet. Apart from the time and the Value , also notice the typical London game playing with levels.

I added the white vertical dotted lines in (on the 07:55 and 08:55 candles) so you can see the times on the bigger picture.

Forex is fixed- You hear that all the time! - Well it is - sort of, you just need to know the 'rules' in order to follow along with the institutions!

There may be some people reading this who doubt if Ray really teaches us institutional style trading.

Here is something that Ray's students who trade GBP/USD could have traded alongside UBS bank's traders and clients:

Ray's tweet around midnight (all times are UK time). You can see it was at that time because I show both my computer's time and how long ago the Tweet was.

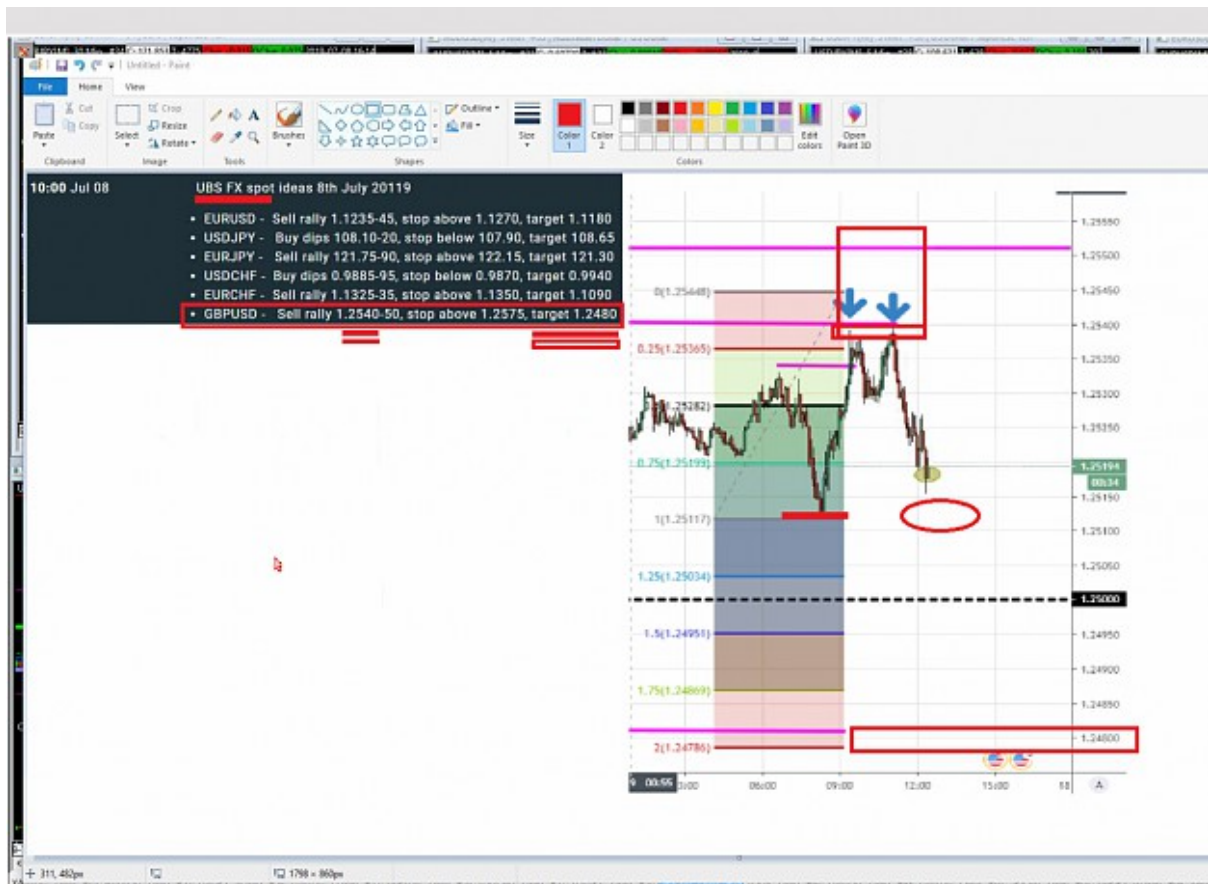

Attached Image (click to enlarge)

OK, so Ray teaches that we need a nice pullback level plus Value to be in our favour, in order to take a trade.

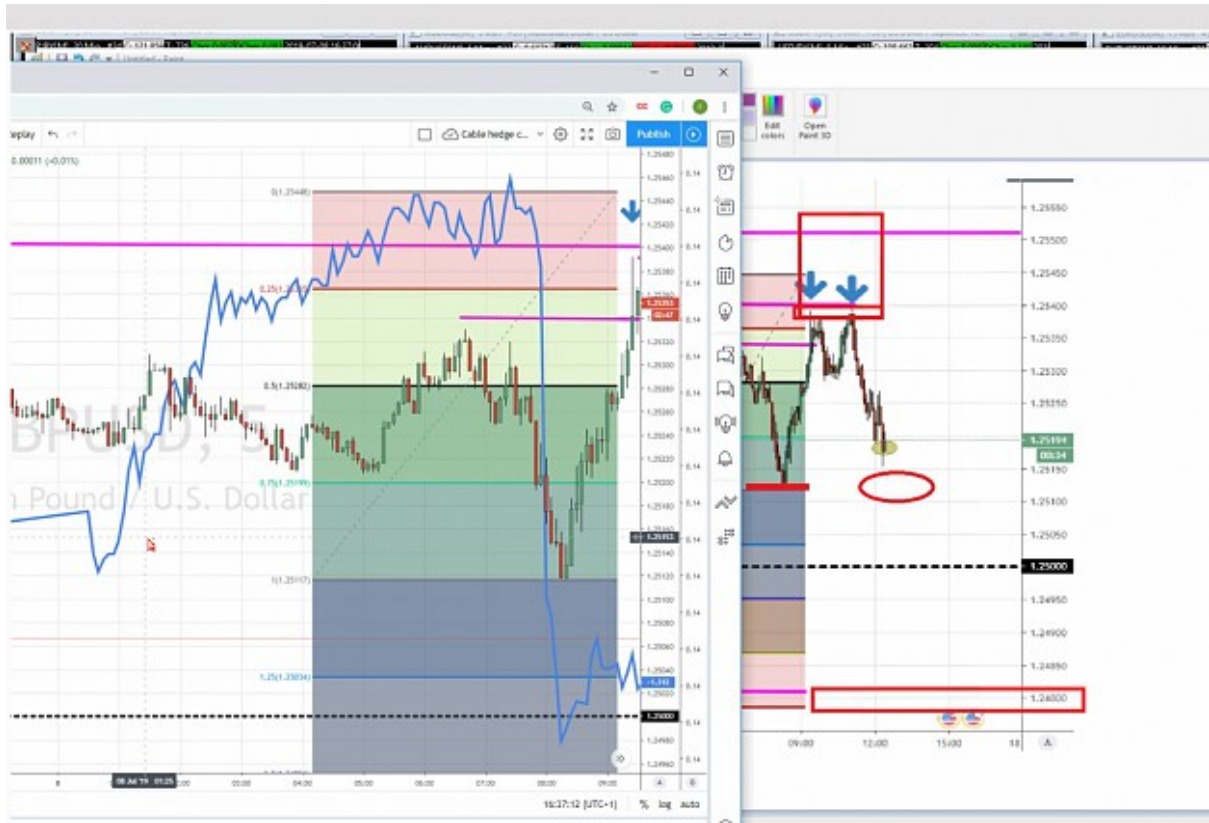

How interesting that at 10:00am Ransquawk reported UBS advising their clients of these trade ideas, one of which is a short of G/U.

Attached Image (click to enlarge)

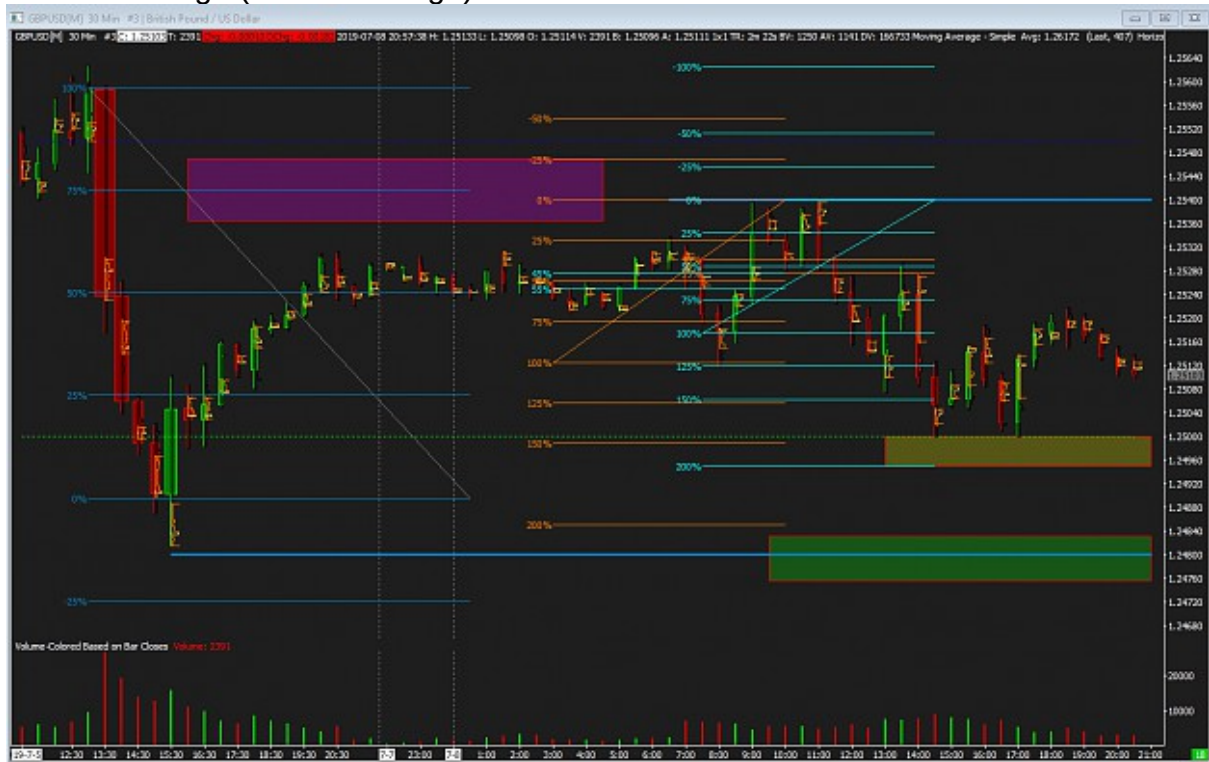

If you look at their average prospective entry price and the prior low, then using a measured move you get the same target that they advised to their clients, of 1.2480

So did we have Value? Looking at the major Value line for the G/U (in blue), what do you think? - Isn't it fabulous, and just at the right time!
Attached Image (click to enlarge)

How would Ray's students have been marking up their own charts? - Something like this:

Attached Image (click to enlarge)

But hey, it didn't get to the target - so it is all B*S* isn't it? - Well perhaps so for UBS clients, but certainly not for Ray's students who know to watch the Value line! Attached Image (click to enlarge)

Notice that the value line (in Blue - yes it is the same value line) was falling from the entries through until 13:00 and then started to rise, even though price had not yet got to our conservative target area ( the aggressive target area was the same as for UBS traders and clients i.e.1.2480 which it never reached!)

Well that's OK, because we know that institutions need liquidity both to enter and to exit a trade - so they won't be panic buying yet!

Then price reaches our 1st target which is a 'round number' and thus an automatically high liquidity area. And at the same time the value line reaches the opening low.

- Who says that Forex isn't fixed! LOL !
